

Draft Guiding Principles for business & human rights posted for consultation

22 November 2010 (New York & Geneva): Today the Special Representative of the United Nations Secretary-General for Business and Human Rights, Professor John Ruggie, posted the draft “Guiding Principles for the Implementation of the UN ‘Protect, Respect and Remedy’ Framework” on his online consultation forum, <http://www.srsgconsultation.org>. The forum, intended to gather views from a broad range of stakeholders, will remain open until 31 January 2011.

The Guiding Principles elaborate and clarify for companies, states, and other stakeholders how they can operationalize the UN ‘Protect, Respect and Remedy’ Framework, by taking practical steps to address business impacts on the human rights of individuals. The UN Human Rights Council had endorsed the Framework unanimously in 2008, and asked Ruggie to provide this additional concrete guidance.

"I hope that stakeholders in every region will take advantage of this opportunity to be heard before I finalize the text of the Guiding Principles," said Ruggie. “The online forum is a critical complement to the more than 40 in-person consultations I’ve conducted around the world since my mandate began in 2005.”

After the forum closes in January, Ruggie will submit the final text of the Guiding Principles to the UN for translation, before presenting it formally to the Human Rights Council at its June session.

Background

John Ruggie, Berthold Beitz Professor of International Affairs at the Kennedy School of Government and Affiliated Professor in International Legal Studies at Harvard Law School, was appointed by then-Secretary-General Kofi Annan as Special Representative in 2005. In 2008, the Human Rights Council welcomed the UN “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework that he proposed, and gave him another three-year mandate to develop practical recommendations to operationalize the Framework. His mandate concludes in June 2011.
